KOOTENAY MINES.

A FEW FACTS ABOUT THE TOAD MOUNTAIN CLAIMS.

What Some of Them Pan Out—A Rock Puzzle 6000 Feet Above the Sea Level—Another Elaborate Quartz Mill Just Built in the District.

From our own Correspondent.]

After six weeks of hard travel and study on Toad mountain, I have at last arrived at a state of complete ignorance which I will now venture to lay before you. The formations would puzzle the very Father of Liars. In my last letter I spoke of the mineralized formation as being irruptive. Doubtless it was irruptive once, but it has been so squeezed, set endways and "mussed up" generally, that it has got the appearance in most places of a water made rock, and it is assigned to much the same age as the formations of the Warm Springs Camp. As to how these tracts of stratified rock got perched on a hill in the middle of granite—unless my last letter explained it all truthfully—I decline to say.

On the eastern spur of the mountain and the north face thereof, in the midst of one of these tracts of rock puzzle, is the Silver King, some 6,000 feet above the sea. Here in diabase-porphyrite there is a zone of indefinite size, in which veins of pure mineral permeate the fissures of shattered rock. This ore, of which an enormous amount lies awaiting treatment, is about half copper in the gray and peacock forms, and carries 22 to 27 p.c. sulphur; 1 to 12 p.c. iron; 1 to 7 p.c. insoluble matter; 2 to 4½ p.c. arsenic; 1 to 5 p.c. zinc; ½ to 2½ p.c. silver; 1 to 15 p.c. antimony; 1 to 5 p.c. manganese; and a very little, phosphorous, gold, alumina, magnesia, lead, cobalt and nickel. This is stated by the Geological Survey Report to assay from $75 to $[illegible] in silver, and rumor says up to $16,000. There is usually from $1 to $2 in gold. Every fragment is a perfect gem for beauty, shining with most gorgeous lustres of cobalt and violet. As to extent, a vast deposit is said to have been discovered, and a cross cut of 30 feet to have determined no limits. By many the chute is stated to be 100 feet wide. The deposit extends the full length of the Silver King and the Kootenay Bonanza claims, or 3,000 feet. From the nucleus of this gigantic chute, spurs and extensions reach in every direction, but the main ledge extends westward for about three miles with the Iroquois ledge abreast of it, and in many parts important outliers. The eastern extensions and northeast and southeast spurs show the Silver King ore often in large quantities, but scattered in quartz gangue. But from the foot of the Silver King claim westward the ore, scattered in quartz gangue, is of galena and grey copper usually in a 5 to 7 foot ledge, and assays in the Dandy from $15 to $3000 silver, and in the Toughant from $50 to $10,000 per ton. In the Give Out Creek gulch, the claims are little developed and the surface croppings are not nearly so strong. There is a heavy iron capping on the Irish Bell and somewhat less on the Ollie Rising, however, over the northeast spur there is a strong showing, except at the summit, for there the mineral has hardly found its way to the surface. On the sharp descent westward to Sandy Creek the Jonah and Tonghant exhibit a most beautifully defined ledge of 5 to 7½ feet in the latter, and 208 feet of development has shown a large body of manganese for fluxing and improvement with every foot of depth. Beyond the next claim, situated in the Sandy Creek bottom, nothing is yet known of the Silver King ledge.

The Iroquois ledge is generally better defined and wider, and has the characteristics of the Dandy rather than of the Silver King, showing galena, grey copper and pyrites of copper and iron and generally assaying from $33 to $180. The Iroquois claim has 65 feet of development on a 6 to 12 foot ledge and contains rock assaying up to $800. Eastward the Union Jack and Wanhoe show a deposit as much as 20 feet wide, said to concentrate $250; and westward the New Market is in places 15 feet wide, with concentrates assaying $30 to $400 silver and $3.00 gold. Beyond this, upon and adjacent to the ledge, are a number of claims reaching westward 2½ miles, and all of them show on the surface more or less indications of value. It would take a big newspaper to contain an account of all the claims located on the Silver King Belt; and we have yet to see more claims elsewhere than could be misrepresented this year by a dozen newspaper men under guidance of the imaginative prospector.

To the northward of the Silver King belt on the lower slopes of Toad Mountain, is the Cottonwood Smith valley. There is a mineral belt which no jury of experts could convince each other about in a month. Right at the east end of the foothills, at a height of 4500 feet above the sea, the Golden King is one of a string of claims on a diabase-schist formation. Through this there runs a zone that has been charged with iron pyrites in specks, and quartz in streaks, and the whole decomposed to a depth of several feet. Here a mining camp has just put up an elaborate mill, without, it seems, waiting to prospect the mine to any depth, and the consequence is a notice to trespassers on the door and the oxidization of some very costly machinery, which will in time further mineralize the iron stained schists below. It must not be supposed from this that mining on Toad Mountain is more than usually risky to the experienced and intelligent miner. In the same formation on the course of Giveout Creek, are two ledges close together, one three and a half feet wide of gold quartz and the other two and a half with working percentages of galena, iron and silver. The Sundown and Climax are in their way as curious as the Golden King.

Across Cottonwood Smith Creek is the angle which it forms with the west arm there is an outlying tract of diabase rock, like the Silver King belt in character, but charged with ledges of silver bearing galena, many of them showing also considerable assays in gold. There I saw claims on this belt at what are known as the Five Labau mines, the ledges were two and three feet wide and contained a glassy quartz much stained, and charged with fine galena and iron pyrites and stated to assay $35 to $40 silver and $3 to $40 gold. There are remarkable fine mining and milling facilities. Further up the hill the Wild Rover is said to show assays up to $148 in gold. The capital ledge here is said to be 15 feet wide and the claims above on Anderson Creek of much the same general character.

On the slopes of Toad Mountain, drained directly by Kootenay river, and indefinitely eastward, is the great gold belt which may ultimately prove as valuable as the Silver King belt itself. I do not propose to enter into details as to the hundred claims of which I have notes; but premising that the belt is supposed to run about W. S. W. and E. N. E. and the ledges to cross it transversely in a northerly and southerly direction, and the country rock to be granite or rather mica syenite, I will give some description of the Poorman Mine to show what can be done with the rest by men who have courage enough. The Poorman ledge appears about eighteen inches to two feet wide, indeed one of the smallest I saw in the gold belt. It consists of white quartz slightly charged with pyrites of iron and copper, and the average assay was stated to the Geological survey as $30 per ton. The ore is treated by a 10-stamp mill, worked by a Pelton waterwheel, the fine ore being taken by amalgamation and the sulphites concentrated and shipped for further treatment. This pays well. There is no need to enumerate several solid square miles of claims. The Forty Nine creek gold fever of many years ago, showed as well as anything can that the country is full of gold.

There remains for mention now a group of claims on the north side of the Kootenay, showing one to two hundred foot ledges of copper and nickel bearing rock, in a syenite formation. These claims commence within a few hundred feet of the railway and extend three miles, one of them, the Queen Victoria, showing a reef thirty feet high on the mountain side. They are probably capable of successful treatment on a large scale. There are also deposits of iron near Ward's Ferry and elsewhere, and nickel and other claims in several portions of the camp.

How big the mineral tract is no one knows, how rich we dare not conjecture, and we are never likely to find out unless the country comes to the help of the camp, and by fair government and timely investments encourage outsiders to take the risk of a very big profit.

W. J. Clarke of the N. P. R. telegraph offices, Tacoma, is over visiting his brother, J. Clarke, of the C. P. R. telegraph of this city.

S. J. Wilmot, superintendent of Dominion fish hatcheries, who has been in the Province for a few days, returns east to-night. His son and daughter are with him.

Rev. Father Van Nevel leaves tomorrow for his new field of labor in Quamichan. While expressing regret at parting with his many friends in Victoria, he looks hopefully towards his new home, where he anticipates an improvement in his somewhat delicate health, and where he will undoubtedly gather about him a circle of friends who will as fully appreciate his work as those he leaves behind.

Capt. Wallran arrived on Friday night, 14 days from Liverpool, to take command of one of the C. P. N. Co.'s steamers. The captain was first officer on the Islander on the voyage from England to Victoria, but returned to England shortly after the arrival of the steamship here. His late trip across the Atlantic was made on the White Star steamship Majestic, which he pronounces the finest and fastest steamship afloat. The captain's friends will be pleased to know that he is going to reside in Victoria.

Has Had His Day.

LONDON, Aug. 13.—King Kalikua, of Hawaii, has definitely announced that in all probability he will be in London in autumn. As far as appearances go he will excite but languid interest. He has been moved by the report of the reception which was accorded his spouse, but the Queen of Hawaii visited England at an opportune moment and she attracted attention because of the homage she desired to pay Queen Victoria. She was certainly an interesting figure at the jubilee rejoicings and procession.

Some of the Attractions for the World's Fair—Spokane Falls Tailors on Strike—Blaine and the Behring Sea the Talk of the Navy and Military.

ST. PAUL, Aug. 13.—The Pacific coast extension of the Great Northern will be begun as soon as a requisite force of men and teams can be collected. Advices from Montana are that a thousand men are needed at once.

Tailors on Strike.

SPOKANE FALLS, Aug. 13.—All the journeymen tailors in this city are out on a strike. Saturday evening the Tailors' Union adopted a new scale of prices, and upon its presentation to the employing tailors this afternoon all refused to sign. All the journeymen then walked out. The strikers claim that the new price list is as low as that prevailing in Sound cities, and lower than the shedule in force in Butte and Helena.

How Romantic.

NEW YORK, Aug. 13.—Years ago T. R. Collins, a wealthy real estate owner of Irvington, married a handsome widow of Brooklyn. She had an alleged niece, Nellie Richardson, who lived with them. Collins died, leaving a son, Henry. He grew to manhood and won Nellie's love. Mrs. Collins persuaded the boy to travel, hoping to put an end to the attachment. It failed and Henry returned and claimed his bride. Then the agonized mother was forced to tell him that Nellie was not her niece, but her daughter, the fruit of her shame, and Harry's sister. The boy went out and made an attempt at suicide, but failed.

Wild War Talk.

CHICAGO, Aug. 13.—A special from Washington City says Blaine and Behring sea matters are still the chief subjects of gossip in naval and military circles at Deer Park. Col. Kellogg, who served for years on the staff of General Thomas, in speaking last night of the English and their actions, verified the sentiment of the many present when he said: "Our army has had no chance to distinguish itself since 1865, and the officers of the regular army would welcome war with England. If John Bull can't take care of Canada it ought to belong to us, and if he gets into trouble with us we will take it. If we don't want that we can give it to the Irish. I imagine that Irish sympathizers on the other side would make things hot for England in a contest with the United States." Secretary Rusk, who was among those present, unofficially stated that he could raise a division in Wisconsin on 24 hours' notice, and that other sections could probably do the same.

Rich and Riotous.

NEW YORK, Aug. 13.—A special to the Tribune from Springfield, Ohio, says: Three Springfield young men, W. P. Sully, Thos. Green and Currie James, went to Dayton night before last and painted the town red. Sully is the only son of President Alfred Sully of the Ohio Southern Railway, and is heir to about $8,000,000. Green is the cashier and James receiving clerk in the Ohio Southern freight office. A little after midnight they finished their debauch at the Pony house, where they engaged in a row at once with the barkeeper, and James, picking up a bottle threw it with all his might at the bartender. It just missed the man's head and struck a mirror costing $1200, smashing it into fragments. The reckless youths were arrested and placed in the station-house. They appeared before Mayor Ward this morning and their trial was set for Thursday afternoon. The arrests have caused great excitement.

A Favorite Place.

NIAGARA, Aug. 13.—A number of suicides are occurring at the Clifton bridge, the victims leaping from the structure into the water. It was recently moved by the authorities to erect additional barriers, which it was thought would render the practice impossible. This is not the case, however, for another was added to the long list of self murderers yesterday, the suicide jumping over the barriers and hurling himself headlong into the stream.

Leaves all Behind.

SAN FRANCISCO, Aug. 13.—Nicholas Luning, the well-known capitalist, died Monday night of heart disease. He leaves an estate valued at from 15 to 20 millions.

A Danubian Revolt.

NEW YORK, Aug. 13.—Fifty-nine captains and the majority of the crews of vessels of the Danube Navigation Co., have given notice to their employees of their intention to strike in September.

Boom in Steamships.

NEW YORK, Aug. 13.—There is a boom in steamships in Rio Janeiro and along the coast of South America. Advices from Rio on Sunday fairly astounded owners of vessels in this city. They were to the effect that at least four new steamship companies have been recently formed in South America. The business of these lines will be almost entirely confined to the coasting trade, and will not affect lines plying between New York and South American ports so much, but will deal a deathblow to English and German lines which have for years wandered along the coast, picking up freight from various ports.

World's Fair Attractions.

PUEBLO, Colo., Aug. 13.—The unique idea given out from Milwaukee that the brewers of that city would erect a beer palace at the World's fair out of beer kegs, bottles and other appurtenances of the beer industry has given additional interest to the wish that the Colorado mineral palace, just as it is now being erected in this city, be rebuilt at Chicago as an important part of the Colorado exhibit. The columns would each be built of a different stone, while on the side the native beauty of minerals taken from hundreds of mines would be greatly heightened by the rays from 2500 electric lights. The only hindrance would be the cost, which, including the value of the specimens, would be in the neighborhood of half a million dollars. A genuine mine in working order forms part of the programme, and it is safe to say that no attraction at Chicago would be more generally visited. The advance in silver has put the miners and mine owners in splendid humor, and it is safe to predict that the scheme would be worked out.

The Gods Propitious.

BOSTON, Aug. 12.—The day opened perfectly for the Grand Army demonstration with the thermometer at 67 at 9 a.m. and a nice breeze. It is estimated there are 100,000 strangers in the city. Before 8 o'clock the roar of cannon from the fleet in the harbor announced a dispatch, with Secretary Tracy, Vice-President Morton and Gen. Sherman, coming up the bay, and half an hour later another salute announced their arrival.

WHOLESALE POISONING.

Organized Bands of Poisoners Makes Travelling Dangerous in India.

CALCUTTA, Aug. 11.—In more than half the railroad stations here huge placards are displayed, saying "beware of poisoners." Detailed warning is also given to travelers against accepting hospitality from the natives or purchasing drink or eatables of any kind. These precautions are rendered necessary by the fact that organized bands of poisoners have infested the railways, peddling fruit, cake, drinks, etc., to passengers, chiefly at the stations. Their wares are poisoned and scores of persons have met death at their hands. Moreover, the inhabitants of the villages themselves have taken up the trade and poison those whom they receive as guests. In these latter places the object appears to be plunder, but in the former it can only be simply a desire to murder, since the poisoners have no opportunity to rob the bodies of their victims. A perfect mania for such crimes has for some time prevailed on nearly all the routes of travel throughout India, and, in spite of the police, the horrible trade is still pursued.

AFRAID OF BEING ROBBED.

The United States Sends out a Guard for its Northern Forests.

NEW YORK, Aug. 13.—The World's Washington special says: On September 1st an expedition will set out from Duluth on an errand of extreme delicacy and importance, and which may be fraught with something of the interest that attaches to the Behring Sea matter. Four special agents of the general land office, accompanied by an armed posse of fifteen men, will start on that day to investigate the alleged robbery of valuable timber by Canadian lumbermen from public lands which is known as the "Rainy River country." The land is in Wisconsin territory and is remote and undeveloped, and can only be reached by the use of canoes. The charge is that for the past ten years parties from Canada have come down there every fall and carried off valuable timber. The forests of white and north pine there are reckoned among the finest in the world. The depredations for the last year alone are estimated at over 180,000,000 feet. The profits, of course, are enormous, and the people of this country are sufferers in two ways. In the first place the timber is stolen from them, and in the second place the sawed lumber is brought back into Dakota and other northwestern states and brought into competition with the product of American mills honestly obtained. Complaint on this score has several times been lodged with the Interior Department, but has until now gone unheeded. At last, however, the Department is aroused, and what is to extend into a practical inspection and picketing of the whole Canadian border with a view of running down alien thieves, is to be inaugurated. The party will be under the command of A. E. Rosenbusch, one of the most competent and experienced special agents of the land office, and intimately acquainted with the territory he goes to examine and patrol. He has three assistants who have likewise been made deputy marshals, and upon the finding of Canadian poachers any where they will be empowered to arrest them on the spot and hand them over for trial. CHAPTER IV.—(Continued.)

Talk of it he had to. The major early that morning asked him, as they were going to the matinee:

"Have you seen Hayne yet?"

"Not since he reported on the parade yesterday," was the curt reply.

"Well, I suppose you will send men to help him get those quarters into habitable shape?"

"I will, of course, major, if he ask it. I don't propose sending men to do such work for an officer unless the request comes, and she does still better that it would crush him to believe it was even suspected by any one else. Right or wrong, the one thing for her to do, she doubted not, was to maintain the original guilt against all comers, and to lose no opportunity of feeding the flame that consumed Mr. Hayne's record and reputation. He was guilty—he must be guilty; and though she was a Christian according to her view of the case—a pillar of the church in matters of public charity and picturesque conformity to all the rubric called for in the services, and much that it did not—she was unrelenting in her condemnation of Mr. Hayne.

To those who pointed out that he had made every atonement man could make she responded with the severity of conscious virtue that there could be no atonement without repentance and no repentance without humility. Mr. Hayne's whole attitude was that of stubborn pride and resentment. His atonement was that enforced by the unanimous verdict of his comrades, and even if it were so that he had more than made amends for his crime the rules that held good for ordinary sinners were not applicable to an officer of the army. He must be a man above suspicion, incapable of wrong or fraud, and once stained he was forever ineligible as a gentleman. It was a subject on which she waxed declamatory rather too often, and the youngsters of her own regiment wearied of it. As Mr. Foster once expressed it in speaking of this very case, "Mrs Rayner can talk more charity and show less than any woman I know." So long as her talk was aimed against any lurking tendency of their own to look upon Hayne as a possible martyr, it fell at times on unappreciative ears, and she was quick to see it and to choose her hearers; but here was a new phase—one that might rouse the latent esprit de corps of the Riflers—and she was bent on striking while the iron was hot. If anything would provoke unanimity of action and sentiment in the regiment, this public recognition by the cavalry, in their very presence, of the man they cut as a criminal was the thing of all others to do it, and she meant to head the revolt.

Possibly Gregg and his modest helpmeet discovered that there was something she desired to "spring" upon the meeting. The others present were all of the infantry; and when Capt. Rayner simply glanced in, spoke hurried good evenings, and went as hurriedly out again, Gregg was sure of it and marched his wife away. Then came Mrs. Rayner's opportunity.

"If it were not Capt. Rayner's house, I could not have been even civil to Capt. Gregg. You heard what he said at the club this morning, I suppose?"

In one form or another, indeed, almost everybody had heard. The officers present maintained an embarrassed silence. Miss Travers looked reproachfully at her flushed sister, but to no purpose. At last one of the ladies remarked:

"Well, of course I heard of it, but—I've heard so many different versions. It seems to have grown somewhat since morning."

"It sounds just like him, however," said Mrs. Rayner, "and I made inquiry before speaking of it. He said he meant to invite Mr. Hayne to his house to-morrow evening, and if the infantry didn't like it they could stay away."

"Well, now, Mrs. Rayner," protested Mr. Foster, "of course none of us heard what he said exactly, but it is my experience that no conversation was ever repeated without being exaggerated, and I've known old Gregg for ever so long, and never heard him say a sharp thing yet. Why, he's the mildest mannered fellow in the whole—th cavalry. He would never get into such a snarl as that would bring about him in five minutes."

"Well, he said he would do just as the colonel did, anyway—we have that straight from cavalry authority—and we all know what the colonel has done. He has chosen to honor Mr. Hayne in the presence of the officers who denounce him, and practically defies the opinion of the Riflers."

"But, Mrs. Rayner, I did not understand Gregg's remarks to be what you say, exactly. Blake told me that when asked by somebody whether he was going to call on Mr. Hayne, Gregg simply replied he didn't know—he would ask the colonel."

"Very well. That means he proposes to be guided by the colonel, or nothing at all; and Capt. Gregg is simply doing what the others will do. They say to us in so many words: 'We prefer the society of your bete noire to your own.' That's the way I look at it," said Mrs. Rayner, in deep excitement.

It was evident that, though none were prepared to endorse so extreme a view, there was a strong feeling that the colonel had put an affront upon the Riflers by his open welcome to Mr. Hayne. He had been exacting before, and had caused a good deal of growling among the women. They were ready to find fault, and here was strong provocation. Mr. Foster was a youth of unfortunate and unpopular propensities. He should have held his tongue instead of striving to stem the tide.

"I don't uphold Hayne any more than you do, Mrs. Rayner, but it seems to me this is a case where the colonel has to make some acknowledgement of Mr. Hayne's conduct."—

"Very good. Let him write him a letter, then, thanking him in the name of the regiment, but don't pick him up like this in the face of ours," interrupted one of the juniors, who was seated near Miss Travers (a wise stroke of policy, Mrs. Rayner invited him to breakfast), and there was a chorus of approbation.

"Well, hold on a moment," said Foster. "Hasn't the colonel had every one of us to dinner more or less frequently?"

"Admitted. But what's to do with it?"

"Hasn't he invariably invited each officer to dine with him in every case where an officer has arrived?"

"Granted. But what then?"

"If he broke the rule or precedent in Mr. Hayne's case, would he not practically be saying that he endorsed the views of the court martial as opposed to those of the department commander, Gen. Sherman, the secretary of war, the president of the United"—

"Oh, make out your transfer papers, Foster. You ought to be in the cavalry or some other disputatious branch of the service," burst in Mr. Graham.

"I declare Mr. Foster, I never thought you would abandon your colors," said Mrs. Rayner.

"I haven't madam, and you've no right to say so," said Foster, indignantly. "I simply hold that any attempt to work up a regimental row out of this thing will make bad infinitely worse, and I deprecate the whole business."

"I suppose you mean to intimate that Capt. Rayner's position and that of the regiment is bad—all wrong—that Mr. Hayne has been persecuted," said Mrs. Rayner, with trembling lips and cheeks aflame.

"Mrs. Rayner, you are unjust," said poor Foster. "I ought not to have undertaken to explain or defend the colonel's act, perhaps, but I am not disloyal to my regiment or my colors. what I want is to prevent further trouble; and I know that anything like a concerted resentment of the colonel's invitation will lead to infinite harm."

"You may cringe and bow and bear it if you choose; you may humble yourself to such a piece of insolence, but rest assured there are plenty of men and women in the Riflers who won't bear it, Mr. Foster, and for one I won't." She had risen to her full height now, and her eyes were blazing. "For his own sake I trust the colonel will omit our names from the next entertainment he gives. Nellie sha'n't"—

"Oh, think, Mrs. Rayner," interrupted one of the ladies, "they must give her a dinner or a reception."

"Indeed they shall not! I refuse to enter the door of people who have insulted my husband as they have."

"Hush! Listen!" said Mr. Graham, springing toward the door."

There was wondering silence an instant.

"It is nothing but the trumpet sounding taps," said Mrs. Rayner, hurriedly.

But even as she spoke they rose to their feet. Muffled cries were heard, borne in on the night wind—a shot, then another, down in the valley—the quick peal of the cavalry trumpet.

"It isn't taps. It's fire!" shouted Graham from the doorway. "Come on!"

A Warning.

MR. EDITOR,—It is a well-known fact that the majority of people are inclined to look upon a cold in the head as a matter of little importance—involving at the most only a temporary inconvenience. No more disastrous mistake was ever made. The neglected cold in the head is the source of the catarrhal affections with which about seven-tenths of the people of this country are afflicted; and catarrh itself is too often the preliminary stages to consumption and death. The symptoms of catarrh are manifold, but among them may be mentioned, offensive breath; dull, oppressive headache; offensive droppings from the nostrils into the throat and bronchial tubes; deafness or partial deafness; constant hawking and spitting; weak and watery eyes; a hacking cough and feeling of general debility; ringing in the ears and frequent dizziness. These are but a few of the more general symptoms, and those who experience them should lose no time in applying a remedy. Delays are proverbially dangerous, and in the case of this too prevalent disease may lead to death. We offer Nasal Balm to the public as a positive cure for cold in the head and for catarrh in all its forms and stages. Nasal Balm has been tested in thousands of cases, and the testimonials in our possession prove that it is all we claim for it. It has cured other sufferers, it will cure you. It is easy to use, pleasant and agreeable and does not require a douche, or any torturing instrument to apply it. Give it a trial and be convinced of its great efficacy. Looking for Corpses.

SAN FRANCISCO, Aug. 11.—Adair Walker, a local attorney, has been employed by the Chinese six companies to recover the remains of four Chinamen buried in Washington at Spokane Falls. When the Northern Pacific railway was built four Chinamen employed in the construction of the road, died in camp and were buried near Hangman Creek. Their bodies were placed in rough coffins and their graves rudely marked. Since then all traces of the graves have disappeared. Walker has sued the company, and the agents of the corporation are now at work trying to locate the remains. The six companies had a contract to return the bodies to China, hence the interest in the case. If the bodies are not found the railway company will be held responsible.

A Strange Case.

SANTA ROSA, Cal., Aug. 11.—One of the most remarkable cases ever tried in this county has just been revealed to the public. Some time ago David Parks, who lives near Bloomfield, was swindled by the gold brick dodge. A man calling himself W. L. Bean was arrested at San Francisco as the supposed swindler. The trial of the case lasted over a week. Parks and several neighbors, some of whom are the best known men in the county, positively identified Bean as the man who swindled Parks. The proprietor of the Petaluma hotel identified Bean, who had registered under the name of Miller at the hotel just before the swindle was perpetrated. The prisoner protested his innocence. He had a large number of depositions from New York, St. Paul and Boston to plainly show that he was not in California when Parks was swindled. It was the general impression that fraud was practiced to procure the depositions, but the jury stood six for conviction against six for acquittal. Bean has a crook in his finger, and was also identified as to that particular. His case was so peculiar in its nature, and the crime with which he was charged so cunningly devised that District Attorney Burnett after the trial went east to test the validity of the despositions. He visited St. Paul, Boston and New York, and found everything true as stated in the deposition. The witnesses who were reliable men, recognized Bean's photograph, and exhibited his signature on different hotel registers. He will probably be discharged from custody.

WHAT IS THE SPIRIT OF THE LAW?

The organ of the Opposition does not profess to be an infallible exponent of the law, but with respect to the calling out of troops it is assured that the law contemplates a wise conservatism on the part of the authorities. It matters not whether there is any similarity between American law and British law in the matter, the point to be decided in either case is, whether or no the situation warrants the assistance of the military. All those acquainted with English history have no need to be told of the jealousy of the public of military interference in matters which appertain to the civil function. So frequently have troops been employed as instruments of tyranny that with the larger proportion of people the sight of armed men, unless the situation is one confessedly critical, acts as a red rag to a bull. This is understood, and the law was framed in conformity with the feeling; that is, the power to call out troops was extended to the lowest magisterial functionaries, upon the assumption that they being nearest the people and imbued with their prejudices, would scarcely resort to measures not palpably essential to the preservation of life and property. But in the instance in point the spirit of the law was disregarded. The fears of a riot were groundless in the first place, and in the second magisterial authority was invoked that had no definite knowledge of the situation. The object in vesting ordinary magistrates with the power to call out troops is based on the assumption that they are acquainted at first hand with the exigencies which make such a step justifiable. Magistrates living at a distance from an anticipated emeute, and who on what is necessarily second-hand testimony, call out troops, manifestly exceed their duty. The law does not contemplate anything of the kind. None but the magistrates on the spot are supposed to act, except in cases where none are present, a contingency not likely to occur. The question we would have the Colonist answer in connection with the sending of troops to Wellington is this: Why were not the magistrates on the spot required to act in the matter? Had they called out troops criticism would have been disarmed. The spirit of the law would have been complied with. Unless the Colonist can categorically answer this question it pursues the subject of the defence of the Victoria magistrates and incidentally the Government to small profit.

WOMEN AND PANTS.

With respect to the intellectual development of women and all that that phrase means relative to her political emancipation, few men there are, we conceive, who have experienced the slightest sensation of jealousy. And, how, and why should it come about that man should be apprehensive of feminine emancipation, intellectual and political? Has he not been instructed to the effect, that it was decreed by Omnipotence that woman should play second fiddle; that however much she might strive against it, destiny was inexorable? Circumstanced thus, who would be jealous of her? As a matter of fact man deplores the fiat which placed a limitation on her intellectual development—not from any especially generous motive, probably, but because, woman his equal, he would be relieved of the deference to her which the usages of society impose upon him. Under the existing order of things he must protect her, support her and amuse her, whereas, was she his equal, these obligations, at least, would be mutual. She would have to stand, then, the ice cream as often as he, and put up as frequently for theatre tickets, while in the matter of being compelled to endure her puerilities that would be a matter of option. There, as matters stand, the onus of agreeableness lies with him. The superior animal, he must be condescending. Such is the penalty of his being the stronger vessel. Bearing in mind that we are attracted toward our superiors and repelled from our inferiors, has it never occurred to anybody that the primal decree of woman's inferiority bore harder on the man than on the woman? EVE, no longer ADAM'S equal, condemned to chatter about small things—the tensile strength of fig-leaves, for instance—shall we suppose that ADAM always found her interesting; and worst of all, shall we suppose that she evinced a quick appreciation of his jokes? We are obliged to assume that ADAM felt lonely in his intellectual superiority, and that he offered up many a silent protest against the decree which limited the scope of his spouse's intellectuality and yet condemned him to the dubious task of trying to amuse her.

In the light of this proposition can woman reasonably aver that man is jealous of her possible intellectual ascendancy? Nothing could be more unreasonable. He would rather for the reasons that have just been given that she was his equal.

But while man sighs for the intellectual latitude in woman which would afford to him a fruitful source of joy and of enlightenment, there is a point in her development to which he strenuously objects. When woman attains to that intellectual eminence the expressed symptom of which takes the uncontrolable penchant for pants, man feels that he is confronted with an usurpation as superfluous in respect to feminine enfranchisement as it is inimical to his perogative as one of the "lords of creation." In this respect he has no mind to divide honors. Pants are his peculiar property. Indeed, he is unable to understand how it comes about that lovely woman should desire to ape the ways of "horrid men." Deeply imbued with these conservative notions, how does he regard the pant-wearing woman. We dare not trust ourselves to answer. Besides we prefer to make use of higher authority. The Bishop of Manchester says: "You all know that women cannot bear an effeminate man. Very well, then, you ought easily to know that man cannot bear a masculine woman. When a woman puts on collars and cuffs, imitates the manly stride, and the bold, manly stare, she becomes a horror to the most of us.

"But, some of these strong-minded sisters would say: 'I don't care what men think of me; it is quite enough if I am satisfied with myself.' Just so, and I venture to add that the human race will lose little if that kind of lady continues to be an aversion to men until she dies. What does antagonism between the sexes mean? It means the abandonment to a large extent of marriage; it means to a large extent the abandonment of home—the true source of all the virtue, all the grace, all the strength, and all the happiness of human life. Now, I am in favor of the higher education of women just for this reason, because I believe that by developing to the greatest possible extent the mental and moral and spiritual faculties of women you will make them better wives and better mothers."

So much for the Bishop of Manchester. Let us turn to the other side of the picture. Lady FLORENCE DIXIE, in her enthusiasm for what she calls the higher development of her sex, pays no heed to the development of the moral and spiritual faculties which make women better wives and mothers. Pants are her ideal. Her ideal of a woman is she who will succeed Lord SALISBURY. The revolution of 1900 foretold by Lady DIXIE, is the revolution which abolishes the last remnants of the subjection of woman to man. In her recent book, which contains this extraordinary prophsey GLORIA DE LARA fired by her mother's wrongs determines to become the savior of her sex. She enters college under the name of HECTOR D'ESTRANGE thrashes an "overgrown monster" of a bully, and writes a review article on woman's rights which scores an immense success. HECTOR next enters Parliament, where he carries his Woman's Rights Suffrage Bill by a large majority. Next he raises a woman's volunteer force numbering 200,000, and works them up to such a state of efficiency that they can march 27 miles in eight hours and a half. Finally HECTOR as Prime Minister of England, is arrested for the murder of his mother's divorced husband, and is condemned to death. He then discloses his identity, which arouses so much enthusiasm in the bosoms of his 200,000 Amazons that, to make a long story short, a revolution is the result. HECTOR then marries his foreign secretary and subsequently is duly installed as the first prime ministrix of England. Such is Lady FLORENCE DIXIE'S vision of the world and all the wonders that shall be. Comment is superfluous. We can only say that the foreign secretary attached to the skirts of GLORIA (we suppose she wears them) is a pitiable object, nor is GLORIA unsexed a much more presentable spectable.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

The Arch-Duke JOHN of Austria, who some time ago cast aside the insignia and renounced the titles of his lofty rank, will have a good opportunity of studying modern democracy under one of its most lively manifestations, as he happens just now to be in Buenos Ayres. After assuming the name of John Orth, he took command of a merchant vessel, and sailed for South America. On reaching the capital of the Argentine Republic, he was annoyed to learn that some of his countrymen there resident were organizing a reception for him of a style and scale befitting the rank that he had abandoned. John Orth did not accept this hesitation to believe in his sincerity as a compliment, and he promptly signified his distaste for any recognition but what was in keeping with his actual station. He has since then been engaged in commercial pursuits, making "connections" for the firm of which he is a member. From there he was to go to Valparaiso to make like arrangements for the Chilian trade.

In the matter of the article entitled "Two Opinions" which appeared in last Saturday's TIMES, a careful perusal of it fails to reveal any language that can be construed as reflecting of the Messrs. DUNSMUIRS' methods of business beyond what we regard their mistake in not recognizing organized labor. This is a matter of public notoriety which the press may very properly discuss. With respect to the policy of the Messrs. DUNSMUIR and that of Mr. ROBBINS toward organized labor, that of necessity is public property, and if in instituting a comparison between the policies of the respective mine owners the Messrs. DUNSMUIR suffered thereby, that is their misfortune. We have no desire to adversely criticise the business methods of the Messrs. DUNSMUIR beyond the point where they make the Province a party to them, and even in this regard we would not be knowingly severe. The situation has presented two questions for consideration, to-wit, is capital wise in ignoring organized labor, and what is the state of things which makes possible the calling out of troops upon an insufficient pretext? Naturally, the Messrs. DUNSMUIR'S names were inseparable from the controversy, and if they have suffered in consequence it was inevitable of the policy they have pursued. We have no quarrel with the Messrs. DUNSMUIR aside from their public acts.

Lot's Wife.

A compact mass of pure rock salt, said to contain 90,000,000 tons, has been discovered in Louisiana. This may be where Lot's wife met with the penalty of looking backward. The New Orleans lottery, in any event, suggests the wickedness of Sodom and Gomorrah.

An Argument for Industrial Democracy.

The Rev. Dr. Lyman, in the August Forum, says: The wharfage of New York city, which with reckless lack of provision we have allowed to become private property, is valuable solely because of the three million people who live on and about Manhattan island. Every farmer in Illinois helps to enhance the value of the Illinois Central railroad; every shopkeeper in New York adds to the value of every warehouse.

Thus it is clear that our wealth is in its source and origin a common wealth. Our system of exchange is a rude method of balancing values with one another. Possibly there may be no better one discoverable; possibly no amendment to it may be conceivable; but no thoughtful man will contend that it affords absolute adjustment or represents a divine equity. The wealth of every millionaire comes from the resources of the land of which he has gotten control; or from natural forces, the chief grist of which falls into his meal bags; or from public franchises given by the state and created for the state; or from that general advantage which grows spontaneously out of the presence and power of a generally diffused civilization and an increasing population. The least part of it is that which his own effort has created. The basis for a democracy of wealth is found in the fact that all wealth springs from the people. The basilar factor in our civilization is that wealth, like political power, is of the people. And therefore it ought to be for the people. At present it certainly is not.

The Short Lived Humorist.

Robert Burdette, in an article on humorists in the Forum, says: In fact, so scarce is the funny man that you must seek for him when you want him. He is not nearly so humorous as his reputation. He loves life and light and warmth, and is so vivacious in his mere enjoyment of life that possibly he sometimes multiplies himself to one's irritated imagination, as one light-winged, restless fly, child of the summer, seems to be a hundred or a thousand to the wise man, bent upon improving his mind and tempting eternity by reading the "Encyclopædia Britannica." The "end man" is a May fly, living in the sunshine for one happy day and then forgotten. In a semi-critical paper, published in Harper's Magazine a few months since, Mr. Lukens mentions by name about 250 American humorists who have made merry with their friends during the past 200 years. It is a pathetic record of strangers. Read it, and underline the names which have a familiar sound to your ears. Blot out the names you cannot remember to have read or heard before, and if you are under 40 years of age, the condensation of the paper will startle you. The people have not been led into the wilderness of frivolity by the end man. Sometimes, the funny man, in a moment of madness, consents to lecture two nights in succession. The second lecture is almost invariably a dismal failure. "One consecutive night" is the limit of the funny man's course. But people do like to be amused a little, and so the end man is usually put on. Frequently he is informed—and the unconscious seriousness of the committee-man who so informs him is funnier than anything in the lecture—that "we have had the very best lecturers in the country on our course this winter, the strongest minds and greatest thinkers in America, and now our people want a little change."

KATE FIELD'S DESCRIPTION OF THE INHABITANTS.

Ivan Petroff's Code of Commandments for the Guidance of the Aleuts—Ill Effect of Contact With White Men—Immorality and Disease Almost Universal.

Third in descent from the North Pole are the inhabitants of the Aleutian Archipelago, now numbering 2,145. The original name of the Aleuts, "Kagataya Koung'us," signifies "Men of the East," but, having been dominated by Russians for more than a century, these people, by intermarriage, have ceased to be a pure race. However, the early Aleuts, according to the special government agent, Ivan Petrof, had a most excellent moral code of ten commandments, from which it appears they have learned little from "civilization." The first commandment enjoined the honoring of parents. Poverty was to be respected and helped. Hospitality was commanded, and children were instructed to be unselfish and kind to one another. The eighth precept is admirable:

"We must not be forward; it is better to listen than to speak in every condition of life. . . . . Every evil and misfortune comes from the tongue; therefore, in olden times, those who caused common misfortune by imprudent talk were frequently put to death."

It was right to kill an enemy; but to abuse a friend without cause, by word or deed, or to kill him, was punished by death. The same penalty was dealt to robbers, traitors, grumblers at the weather, defilers of sacred places or streams, or of the sea near a village, and to women who became mothers without being wives.

A thoroughly law-abiding, peaceful people are these Aleuts. There has been but one murder among them since the transfer of the territory. They belong to the Greek church, and seem to take great comfort in its observances. While not phenomenally intelligent, they seem to be blessed with phenomenal appetites.

The agent at Pavlovsk harbor told Holmberg, the traveller, that one night he encamped on an island where his men immediately killed an immense bear. He went to sleep, and, on rising six hours later, looked about for the bear. No bear. "Where's the bear?" "We have eaten him up." Six men in six hours had devoured a huge bear!

There are stories—and stories—about bears.

Last among the Alaskan races is the Thlinket, signifying "Man." Living in the Sitkan Archipelago, and having had closer contact with "civilization" than other Alaskans, the Thlinkets have dwindled to 6,763, and have become sadly demoralized. Among them disease tells a fearful tale, disease that means mental and moral, no less than physical degeneration. Never have their conquerors set a good example. How was it possible in the beginning when, as Langsdorf relates in his voyages:

"The greater part of the inferior officers of the different settlements were Siberian criminals, malefactors and adventurers of various kinds."

That very clever man Baranof, first Governor of Russian America, combined great business integrity with a marvelous capacity for lurid dissipation. Like master, like man, like poor Indian. The baneful work begun by Russia was successfully abetted by American traders. Boston sent a steam engine to Sitka in 1887—with a cargo of whiskey and rum! So it comes to pass that to-day the Thlinkets need hospitals even more than schools, and will certainly become a curse to themselves and the United States unless rescued from the poison of heredity and ignorance. If the long-suffering Indian were called upon to describe the white man, he would be quite justified in depicting him as the most destructive scource that ever desolated the human species.

Before the whites corrupted the natives, both man and woman were killed when convicted of immorality. Now, no child is free from taint.

Said a neat, intelligent British Columbia Indian to me at Wrangel, speaking good English too: "Before the whites came the natives often lived to extreme old age. Whiskey and vice have kill'ed them off since then. They want to be like the whites."

One hundred years have wrought disastrous change in the women of the coast. The women of Nootka, according to Captain Mears, were reserved and chaste, and examples of loose and immodest conduct were very rare among them. There were women in St. George's Sound whom no offers could tempt to meretricious submissions.

"Among other visitors of the ship," relates Captain Mears, "we were one day very much surprised by the appearance of a canoe paddled along by women, and containing about twenty of that sex, without a single person of the other. * * * While we were contemplating this company of ladies, a young man leaped suddenly among them from another canoe, at which they were so alarmed that, though clad in their best array, they all threw themselves in an instant into the sea, and swam in a body to the shore." The Indian women of to-day would take no such impromptu bath in Alaskan waters. In many cases she is reared to sell.

One of the Alaska grand jury paid thirty dollars for a native girl, who, however, left her white master on being refused a fifty-dollar dress in which she longed to shine on the Fourth of July, 1887.

Several years ago, the miners of Juneau City passed a law that on the blowing of a horn at nine o'clock in the evening, every male Indian should leave town. Indian villages are quite distinct from the white settlements, and private police notified the Indians. The wives and daughters of these men were not only allowed to remain but were lured to dance-houses, it is needless to say for what purpose. This law was said to be for self-protection, as male Indians are dangerous when under the influence of liquor; but the white man's desire for peace did not embrace a desire for the peace of Indian households, or a regard for the well-being of ignorant women and girls completely at their mercy. In 1884 an Indian came home, and, not finding his wife, went in search of her to the white women's town, but was not allowed an interview. The next day when man and wife met on the beach, he remonstrated with her, and stabbed her upon being called "coward." For his offence, the Indian—who is himself no saint, I am told—was sentenced to seven years' imprisonment. Where lies the blame of that crime? There has been a similar case at Wrangel. Sitka had a law like unto Juneau City for like reasons.

There are coast chiefs who think nothing of letting their wives out to miners for a month or more, and it is no fiction that two Eskimos on the northern coast of Alaska swapped wives temporarily when one turned for a season from fishing to hunting, and the other from hunting to fishing. It was purely a business transaction. Each took the woman that would be of most service for the time being, for native women in Alaska are as serviceable in bread winning as the men.

STILL CLOUDY.

Magistrate Fisher Will try to Clear the Air To-morrow.

It was more by good luck than good management that a fracas at the brewery on the Esquimalt road on Tuesday afternoon did not terminate seriously, and that the wigs, if not the bodies, of the participants were not left weltering on the green. Mr. Fairall, the brewer, has given the TIMES his version of the affray, and while there may be another side to the story, the main facts are known to be about as stated.

Mr. Fairall claims that the roadway passing by his brewery is a portion of his property and that he was at different times assured by the registrar, by Mr. Higgins and jointly by Messrs. Vernon, Pooley and Higgins, that the matter would be adjusted to his satisfaction. The original road allowance is a few yards to the south of the brewery, and next to the track of the E. & N. railway. When canvassing for votes a few months ago, Mr. Higgins, with a diplomatic skill which gained its object, told Mr. Fairall that if he objected to the tramway line being laid down on the present road, that the company would build it on the original allowance. Messrs. Vernon and Pooley, also assured him that in the event of the Government being retained in power, and the forced road being continued through his property, that a special act would be passed, transferring the original allowance to him in lieu of the strip now in use. Trusting the politicians implicitly, Mr. Fairall gave his support to the Government candidates.

Some weeks ago, when the company began the extension of the line to Esquimalt, Mr. Fairall protested against the retention of his property, and both by word and act emphasied his objections. He coaxed and threatened, and built fences, but all to no purpose. The railway company and the politicians were inexoraole. The railway, they said, would be built on the present roadway, which was a public thoroughfare by right of possession for thirty years or more. The promises of the candidate and the assurances of the cabinet, as represented by Messrs. Pooley and Vernon were, on appeals being made to these gentlemen, either entirely disavowed or only admitted in part, and the unfortunate brewer, driven to desperation, intimated that if the law would not sustain him in claiming his property, he would have no hesitation in shooting the man who would attempt to rob him of it. This, in brief, and according to Mr. Fairall's version, is how the trouble began.

On Tuesday afternoon President Higgins, accompanied by a lady, drove over the line, and at the brewery stopped to converse with Foreman Nichols, who was working on the disputed highway. Mr. Fairall, who was present, entered into conversation with the President, and although the words did not come to blows, they approached as near to a personal scrimmage as the well known peace proclivities of the latter would permit. Mr. Fairall reminded Mr. Higgins of his promise to build the tramway on the original roadway, but the latter distinctly and emphatically averred that he had never given such a promise. To this Mr. Fairall, with more candor than politeness, replied that the president of the tramway company was a "liar," language which, to the ears of Mr. Speaker, it is almost needless to say, sounded decidedly unparliamentary. Foreman Nichols, in support of the chair, moved that the words be taken down and proceeded to carry his own motion by knocking Mr. Fairall down. The combatants were at once separated, when Mr. Fairall asked for his shot gun, or went for it, but the foreman was too quick for him. Pulling a big six shooter from his pocket, Nichols covered Fairall, and with all the nonchalance of a Texan desperado, threatened to plug him with bullets if he made any further attempt to carry out his threat. The situation was critical in the extreme, but fortunately no triggers were pulled, and Mr. Higgins and others interfering, the foreman surrendered his weapon. The parties to the fracas then separated and quiet reigned once more in the generally peaceful precincts of Russell's station.

The sequel has yet to be enacted. Mr. Fairall, having been refused a summons by Magistrate Shotbolt, applied to Mr. Wm. Fisher, J. P., who issued his mandate requiring the presence of Nichols at his court at Esquimalt on Thursday, at 11 o'clock, to answer to the charges of assault and carrying a concealed weapon. President Higgins and others present have been summoned as witnesses, and the whole case will be thoroughly investigated.

As previously stated, the above is Mr. Fairall's version and it may be somewhat colored, as few principals are disinterested witnesses. But if only half true, the incident would still require judicial investigation. The ready revolver cannot be tolerated as an "argument" in disputes in this country.

President Higgins, who was seen by our reporter this afternoon, gives a very different version of the affair, especially in regard to the provocation given Nichols and the threats of shooting indulged in by Fairall. Mr. Higgins says he has endeavored, by every means in his power, to conciliate Fairall and proposed that very little work should be done on the line at that place pending a legal decision for or against Fairall. The threats of the latter, previous to the row, were not heeded very much, because they were all looked upon as "idle words," but when he went to the house for his gun, threatening to shoot them on his return, the affair assumed a serious phase. Mr. Higgins denies that he ever promised to build the line on the south of the brewery, and says that what he did tell to Fairall was that if he (Fairall) established legal claim to the present road that the tramway would be laid on the original survey. Having failed to do so, and the road through Fairall's land being pronounced by the Attorney-General a public highway, the company as a matter of course, declined to deflect the line from the present road.

NAUTICAL NOTES.

Items of Interest Along the Water Front—General Marine News.

The steamer Straits of Belle Isle has sailed for Chinese and Japanese ports with almost a full cargo, consisting chiefly of flour and cotton with a quantity of sundries. She took on a large quantity of supplies for the trip. She carries no European passengers but takes away 36 Asiatic.

On the 28th July warrants were issued for the apprehension of a number of sailors who deserted from the ship Mercator at Vancouver, but such a time had elapsed between the time of the sailors' flight and the laying of the information before the police that the men had got clear away. Monday two of them returned and in the afternoon took the S. S. Premier for Seattle.

The new steamer Earl, built by Mr. Dan McGillivray for Capt. Wescott of Vancouver, was launched there on Monday. The vessel is 80 feet long over all, 7 feet 6 inches deep, 16 feet beam and is very stoutly built with a very heavy keel. The engines were built by John Doty & Son, of Toronto, on a new and much improved plan, and were spoken of in high terms of praise by all the experts who were present. They are 100 h. p., double expansion engines with 12 in. and 22 inch cylinders and 16 in. stroke.

Capt. H. A. Mellon has returned to Vancouver from the wreck of the Etta White, which has been located in eight fathoms of water. The vessel struck on a rock not hitherto known or marked on the chart, and covered by only one foot and a half of water at low tide, and which being in the track of vessels will prove a dangerous risk to navigation till it is properly buoyed for the guidance of ship masters. The position of the rock can be seen at Capt Mellon's office.

KING KELLY THE GREAT.

A House and Lot Presented to the Ball Tosser by His Friends.

NEW YORK, Aug. 13.—A special from Boston to the World says: Mike J. Kelly, captain of the Bostons, is in love with the time honored tune of "Home, Sweet Home." He has a right to be. To-night the great ball-player and enthusiastic brotherhood man, was presented with a house and lot valued at $10,000, and containing furnishings and adjuncts worth $3,000 more. The estate is in the aristocratic town of Hingham. The house-warming took place after being cheered to the echo on the ball field. To-day, when King Kelly took the train for Hingham, he was followed by about fifty personal friends in the special train. The formalities and feed necessary to the occasion was observed at the Cushing House. After a hearty supper, speeches fitting the occasion were made by Capt. Kelly, General Ditwell, Director Hart, Arthur Irwin, Johnny Ward, and Jake Graham. G. W. Galvin presided. "King Kelly" in the course of his speech remarked that he was overpowered, and thanked his friends in San Francisco, New York, New Orleans, Chicago and Boston, who had contributed the gift, and promised a small bottle on ice to any and all who might call during the winter months. After the speechmaking the entire party were conveyed to the new home of Mr. Kelly.

MAPLE RIDGE.

DESCRIPTION OF THE DISTRICT BY A CORRESPONDENT.

A Delightful Resort for the Artist and the Angler—"Joseph's". Description as to the Weight of Trout—Promises Before and Performances After Election.

Having read Lieut. Seton-Karr's narrative, entitled, "An Angler's Paradise" I regretted very much that that gentleman had not visited the Lillooet river in his researches. He would have given a better description of this famous stream from its source to its mouth than my feeble pen can give. I say, the river in this municipality, because, you are well aware there is another of the same name farther up the country and well known to the old pioneers of British Columbia. The one nearer to you, however, rises in a lake of the same name which lies embosomed in the mountains about nineteen miles to the northeast of Hammond. Many men from the city, with adventurous turns of mind, have been made happy, whose wanderings have led them to visit this beautiful lake, and, amid the picturesque scenes made memorable by the dauntless exploits of Murray, Sinclair, Irving, [illegible] romance of "The Stolen Tent," to find rest from summer's heat and fatigue in the enjoyment of a bracing mountain air, a sky as blue as the Behring sea affair, and a panorama of mountain and valley scenery which, in its ever-changing lines and aspects, never becomes monotonous. From all this, (travellers, tent and exploits excepted) comes this furious mountain stream rushing down to swell the Pitt. It sometimes becomes in an hour or two, a dangerous torrent, threatening ruin and destruction to all its encounters; the provisions made in the way of bridges at such points of confluence is consequently of the most substantial character. The bridge over the town line and the one on the section line are instances of this, both of them being marvels of solidity in construction. Following this river to its mouth, you observe on its

a district of well-farmed upland, with cottages and barns and cattle sheds and orchards and meadows and great herds of browsing cattle; a scene of bucolic peace; and then, the mountains rising beyond it again, like a solid wall, first wooded, then rocky and gray and then at their summits a mantle of snow. The whole forms a scene combining such contrasts of softness and wildness, of cultivation side by side with utter loneliness and desolation that it cannot fail some day to catch the eye of a painter and lead him to fame and fortune. Oh! Why did Lieut. Karr pass this mountain streamlet by? I raise up both hands and exclaim, "Why did he?" However, for his information, I will tell him, in confidence, of what I heard about as gleaned during my sojourn among this hospitable people. Mr. Karr may consider whether it is not advisable for him to return and take this river in, but as for myself, I have a decided objection to "big game" and I find they are altogether too large for me. I'll show him an instance of the size of some speckled trout caught by one of the most reliable citizens living on its banks, the veracity of whose statements you cannot doubt. I met him on the road and I said, "Hello, Joseph! How are the trout biting to-day?". "Well! I'll tell you," he said. "I caught four trout yesterday weighing twenty-six pounds." As soon as he said that, I became weary and sat down on a log by the wayside to rest and think. A thousand strange forms seemed to crowd into my brain; then I began to calculate the weight and imagine the size of each speckled beauty, and whilst I was meditating, a frog jumped across my path. Ah! Here was the problem solved. I remembered reading of Jim Smiley's famous jumping frog, Daniel, and the serious misfortune that befel poor Dan. in his last race, so I came to the conclusion that Joseph must have been racing trout with some stranger and that whilst he was away hunting other trout or had his back turned, said stranger must have loaded his racers. My mind was now at ease, for I was confident I had solved the problem.

The next day I determined to try what I could do with fine tackle. It being cloudy, I started about 9 a. m., and had not proceeded far when I met a descendant of Ham, who is a neighbor of Joseph's. He had a broad grin on his countenance when he saw me, which ended in a loud guffaw when he heard me say "How is trout-fishing to-day, Sam?" "Hiyou," he exclaimed, "but sit down on dis stump an' I'll tole you about Joe. You know Joe, who libes near de big bridge. Well, he has a boy working for him. Dis boy come to me yesterday and he said, Sam, Joe caught a trout ten feet long to-day! Said I, go 'way, boy, go 'way! de caught a shark sure. Well, dat boy come to me de nex' day and he said, Sam, I made a mistake yesterday. I meant to say Joe caught a trout which weighed ten pounds! Go 'way! I said, go 'way, chile! and tell Joe he must pray de Lord to drive such nonsense out of his head, for he either cotched de debil, a humped-backed salmon, or some torpedo boat that run away from Alaska." After hearing Sam's yarn, I retraced my steps to

HAMMOND.

This once busy little village, which was at one time the actual terminus of the C.P.R. in British Columbia, is having quite a boom in real estate just now. Mr. Smith, of Clover Valley, has just completed and furnished a large hotel which would be a credit to a much larger town. Mr. Smith has his eye, no doubt, on the trade to be derived from the dyking of Pitt Meadows, which is expected to be commenced with early next spring. If such scheme proves a success, Hammond will have only about a mile from it, thirty or forty thousand acres of the finest lands in British Columbia. Notwithstanding this, it is now the centre of a fine farming settlement. The people have the benefits of easy transportation of their produce as steamers call daily on their way to New Westminster, and both passenger and freight trains also run to New Westminster and Vancouver. Hammond being a station of the C.P.R. with express and telegraph offices, Messrs. Lazenby Bros., who purchased Mr. W. J. Harris' store, have greatly enlarged their stock of goods and are doing a rushing business. Affability, combined with the business principle of "quick sales and small profits," entitles this firm to the confidence and patronage of the settlers. Mr. G. W. Henry has his extensive nursery here, which has earned for that gentleman the reputation of having the best stock of fruit trees in the Province. About twenty miles north of Hammond, is the newly discovered tract of prairie found by Messrs. Murray and McKay, which they say contains lands not subject to overflow, sufficient to accommodate 60 or 70 settlers. The Government has seen fit to send a surveyor and party up Hammond Hill, the desirability of placing these lands in the market. It is to be hoped, however, that should they do so, only actual intending settlers be allowed to acquire this tract, and not give the people's lands to any more land monopolists.

Journeying eastward about a mile from Hammond you come to

MAPLE RIDGE PROPER.

Here are the homes of the old pioneers, whose farms are in excellent condition on account of the long residence of these hardy sons of the soil. Grapes and peaches grow and ripen to perfection in the open air and the farmer's say that their orchards never failed to yield for them good profits. There is situated here a good school house under an efficient teacher, two churches (one Episcopal and one [illegible]) and a brick parsonage. There is also a Hotel de Ville here, but it looks very antiquated and ungainly. The wise men of the corporation meet in this rattle-trap building, once every month for the purpose of transacting the business that the ratepayers entrusted them to perform for them during the year. It is sincerely to be hoped that this liberal and honorable body be induced to appropriate, in the near future, a sufficient sum of money, out of their well filled coffers, to replace this ancient piece of architecture for one corresponding with the prosperity looming up on all sides of it.

As you journey one mile still further east you come to one of the busiest little places of its size, in the country. This is

HANEY.

The seat of the brick manufacturing industry on the Mainland. There are three large brick yards here (T. F. Sinclair's, Beckett & Co.'s and Captain Purdy's) all operated by steam and each employing a large force of men. It is surprising to see the amount of cordwood these yards consume; there being no fewer than nine wagons employed for the purpose of drawing it to the yards. Haney has also good shipping facilities, the C. P. R. have four side tracks here for the convenience of the brick-makers and also for the fish-freezing establishment which is also located here. It is also a flag station, steamers call, as at Hammond, daily. The Presbyterians have a fine brick church and the Catholics a wooden one. There are three stores, two hotels, (one, Dockstalder's, being enlarged to accommodate the steady increase of travel) and a number of fine residences. I heard there is also a young ladies' seminary being started by Mr. Loo Gee. This latter fact will at once convey to you some idea of the importance of the place, and also show you the progressive spirit of its citizens. Three or four miles northeast of Haney the C.P.R. are prospecting for coal on the farm of Mr. James Ritchie. Mr. Davies, who is operating the steam drill, has reached the depth of between 400 and 500 feet. About two weeks ago the drill struck a mineral spring, which it seems is heavily charged with gas, and ignites, without confinement, by simply applying a match to it. The boring operations are, however, a profound secret between employers and employees, but I heard they have good indications of coal.

Six miles further east, the shrill whistle of the locomotive gives warning that you are coming to another station within this large corporation; and as the brakesman enters your car you are informed by him that it is Wharnock. It is a more modern place than Hammond or Haney, and whilst it cannot boast of having any manufactures, it can pride itself as lying in the midst of a good farming settlement. There is here a station-house, a neat little school, a store and a church (Catholic).

about two miles east of Wharnock, is the eastern boundary of the corporation of Maple Ridge. You will, therefore, observe that the municipal fathers have a great extent of territory to look after, viz., about 100 square miles, extending from the mouth of the Pitt River on the west to the mouth of the Stave River on the east. Taking the corporation as a whole, it seems to be in a very flourishing condition; but, the people say they cannot thank their paternal government at Victoria for their happy condition. Before the election, Mr. Robson said to a deputation (sent by the council to urge upon him the necessity of opening certain roads, so as to allow settlers to locate on their claims): "Gentlemen, you may now go home and rest assured your municipality will be favorably considered." After the election, the consideration was shown to be $900. The manifestations and expressions of disgust upon the faces of the old settlers show plainly that they know from old experiences how easily the old chameleon can change his colors. The new settlers, however, are truly thankful for small favors. They must hold out their hands and in the language of the Chinooks say, "Cansick mika potlatch nika." Sometimes he'll say, "sitcum dollar," and at others "clataway." It all depends whether you are radiating the same colors as he is at the time or not; in fact, you must be "par nobile fratrum."

The Daily Times.

CITY AND PROVINCIAL.

INDICATIVE OF BUSINESS.

Miners' Supplies in Large Quantities Going Toward Omineca.

A large lot of miners supplies is is being shipped at Spratt's wharf, per the Princess Louise for Hazelton, and as that is the port where all goods for Omineca pass through, this gives the assurance that the goods are for the mining region there. Many dozens of picks and shovels; tons of beans and bacon; 300 barrels of flour, and other articles go to make up the whole, and shows that the demand is believed to be soon great for these things.

Perhaps the latest reports of good finds there have not been exaggerated, and it may be that Omineca will turn out to be another Cariboo. It is to be hoped so at all events, as the working of rich placers in that part of the country means an increase of the wealth of Victoria where of a necessity, the supplies must be procured.

Refuge Home.

Donations received at Refuge Home: Mrs. Hart, Mrs. Spofard, Mrs Pike, Mrs. Burkholder, Mr. Andean, Mrs. H. Siddall, Mrs. D. Spencer, Messrs. Hall, Ross & Co., Mr. D. Spencer.

Wide Tires.

After the first of October it will be unlawful for a vehicle to carry a load weighing more than 2,000 pounds over the roads of Victoria district without having tires four inches in width. In view of this fact it is reported that many of the farmers have sent for road roller wheels to put on their vehicles.

Married in England.

Lieut. E. R. Pears, of H. M. S. Britannica, and Miss J. M. Innes, daughter of J. H. Innes, of Esquimalt, were married at Oxford, England, a few days ago. The interesting ceremony was performed by Rev. A. L. Mayhew, chaplain of Wadham, in the presence of a few intimate friends.

Which One Was Launched?

This is the way a Mainland contemtemporary describes the launching of a steamer. It is slightly ambiguous, to say the least: "On the arrival of Mrs. ——, shortly before 5 o'clock, work was commenced at knocking away the supports and in about five minutes she started to slide off the skid just as easy and with no more jerk than a street car makes on starting up."

Medical Register.

The Medical Register for 1890 has been issued. It gives the names of 76 medical practitioners in the Province, of which twenty-one reside in Victoria. The Medical Act is quoted at length, and the questions propounded to applicants for registry given. The rules and regulations for conducting meeting of the Council, and other information of interest to medical men is published.

An Enjoyable Evening.

Last night Harmony Hall was again awakened from its usual quietness by the sound of music and the tripping of the merry dancers, about 30 couple of whom were present. The dance was a private one but that did not put any obstacle in the way of its being most enjoyable, and G. Cavin and W. Petrie who were the chief mover in getting it up are to be congratulated on the way in which every detail was carried out. Prof. Sharpe's orchestra supplied the music, which speaks abundantly for that most particular part of a dance. The inner man was not at all forgotten and a splendidly laid table amply supplied with good things was well looked after by those present.

The Law Library.

The law society of this city is forming a very valuable collection of books in the court house, which is of great assistance to the legal profession. While there can be no doubt that members of the legal profession who have paid for the same are entitled to the use of the library, it is urged that they should not be permitted to remove them from the building, which appears to be the habit of certain members, seeing that the absence of one volume from a sett, tends to impair the value of the library for the purpose of reference, the absent volume being sometimes the very one required in a case. Surely the benchers might make some rule that would meet the case without lessening the advantages of the library.

Hot Water Heating.

The advantages of heating by hot water have been set forth at various times in such a clear, concise and thorough manner that many converts have been made to this system, which has been growing into popular favor with such rapidity the past few years. Among the first-class heaters, the Spence Heaters have taken a leading rank from the outset and are in use in all parts of the United States and Canada. Their superior construction, simplicity, yet special adaptability of parts, every piece made interchangeable, their variety of sizes, etc., can be seen and fully understood by examining the sample heater, set up and now ready for inspection at the salesrooms of Richardson & Heathorn. We hope every architect and every person contemplating using heating apparatus will see the "Spence" before giving their contracts

Ladies' Sewing Circle.

The Sunday school room of Christ Church Cathedral was the scene of another of those most delightful socials that the Ladies' Sewing Circle of St. James' church have made themselves prominent by. The large audience which was present was made perfectly at home, whether stranger or not, and all enjoyed the splendid programme and the cooling ice cream that was served by the ladies.

The names on the programme speak volumes for the literary and musical part of the evening. The following was the 16th Century.

Furniture finished in the style of three centuries ago, is the latest fact. Some of the designs in oak are said to be very beautiful. A large consignment of bedroom suites in antique style is now on its way from the east to Hastie & Erskine, and is expected to arrive in a few days. Parties furnishing will do well to wait and see these latest designs in ornamental, as well as useful and durable furniture.

John W. Mackay and the C. P. R.

A telegram states that John W. Mackay, the California bonanza king, has been elected director of the Canadian Pacific railway. The interest of the C. P. R., the Postal Telegraph and the Bennett-Mackay cable have been closely identified ever since the latter was established, and the election of Mr. Mackay to the railway directorate indicates a still closer alliance—a consolidation of issues as it were—between these great corporations.

Economical House Warming.

All of the finest modern business buildings and private houses are heated by steam and hot water and the old fashioned stove dispensed with. Among the advantages gained are an even temperature, no coal dust on the furniture, and a saving of fuel and room. See the Safford radiators now displayed at Richardson & Heathorn's before placing your order. They are simple in construction, highly ornamental, and there are over 20,000 of them in use, which speaks volumes for their worth. aug11-1w

The China Steamers.

The Vancouver News says: The officials of the Canadian Pacific Steamship Company admitted yesterday the correctness of the report published by the News-Advertiser on Sunday, that the differences between their company and the Pacific Mail Steamship Company had been satisfactorily adjusted and that the steamers of the Canadian line would not run to San Francisco, the latter company retaining all the territory north of and inclusive of Portland, Or. The steamer Danube will proceed to San Francisco to bring up the freight already contracted for, and thereafter each company will pursue the even tenor of its way.

THE BUILDING TRADE.

Several More Brick Blocks to be Built at an Early Date.

A number of the brick buildings which have been in the course of erection this summer are now completed, and several brick-layers are out of employment, but a large army are still at work.

Among the buildings now in process of erection is the Turner block, corner Douglas and View streets; the R. C. Cathedral; the new Methodist Church; the Anderson block on Johnson street.

Other work is in view, however, and will no doubt be gone on with shortly. It is rumored that Allsop & Mason are to build on that vacant lot on Yates street between the Vancouver House and Nicholles & Renouf's; that Messrs. Dalby & Wilson are to start work on their new block, corner Government and Johnson streets, and that Mr. A. R. Milne is to build a brick block on that vacant lot next to the Grand Pacific hotel on Johnson street. There is every probability that something like this will soon be done and then the few idle hands in the building trade will be busy again.

DISTINGUISHED VISITORS.

A Party of Omaha Gentlemen Taking in the Sights of Victoria.

The steamer Olympian arriving from the Sound last evening had on board a distinguished party of gentlemen, comprising a number of the members of the civic government and board of trade of Omaha, Neb. The party was met at the wharf by President Ward and several members of the B. C. Board of Trade and escorted to the Clarence Hotel, where they are staying. The names of the visitors are: C. L. Chaffee, President of the Council; Councillors F. L. Blumer, E. P. Davis, F. J. Kasper, John McLearie, G. F. Morearty, B. F. Madsen, Henry Osthoff, Thomas Olsen, Ed. Connor, Wm. G. Shriver, A. H. Sander, Daniel H. Wheeler, Geo. L. Dennis, superintendent of plumbing; James Flannery, street commissioner; Sol. A. D. Balcomb, ex-chairman of the board of public works; and Harry Counsman, deputy city clerk.

At ten o'clock this morning, the visitors were provided with carriages, and accompanied by President Ward, Vice-President Hall, T. Earle, M. P., James Fell, T. R. Smith, J. Davies, W. F. Bullen, Ald. Holland, D. Ker, and U. S. Consul Myers, were driven to Esquimalt. Through the courtesy of Flag Captain Lambton, special permission was obtained to visit the flag-ship Warspite at 11 o'clock, a. m., the regular visiting hours being between 1 and 5 p. m. The party was shown all over the splendid battle-ship, the scientific appliances for war which are to be seen on all sides, being courteously explained by the obliging officers.

At one o'clock p. m., the tourists inspected the dry dock, and saw H. M. ship Espiegle leave it. The naval yard was then visited, and our guests expressed themselves as delighted with all that they saw. The return trip was made by Admiral's road, the Gorge and Douglas street. After being driven to the park and the outer wharf, the party were entertained at a luncheon at the Poodle Dog at 3 o'clock. In addition to the names already mentioned the following gentlemen were invited to meet the guests at luncheon: A. C. Flummerfelt, Hon. J. H. Turner, A. E. McQuade, H. F. Heisterman, F. Bonchier, all members of the Board of Trade, together with Mayor Grant, the members of the city council and representatives of the press. A few toasts were proposed and suitably acknowledged and the dejeuner came to an end about the time we were going to press. The party will board the steamer this evening on their return journey.

A Trap.

The water cistern at the corner of Pandora and Blanchard streets badly needs the attention of the Street Committee. The road is caving in around the hole and is a splendid trap for some horse's leg, which if it ever got in would undoubtedly come out in halves.

Good Sidewalk Needed.

It is to be hoped that the Board of Aldermen in its wisdom will see that a good substantial asphalt sidewalk is laid around the City Hall now the new additions are completed. It would be a shame to put down a miserable plank walk around so fine a building.

Citizens Ball.

A meeting of the general committee at the City Hall is called for Friday evening next at 8 o'clock to receive the report of the sub-committee appointed to wait upon Rear Admiral Hotham re citizens ball. It is understood that the admiral and officers of the fleet will accept the proffered hospitality of the citizens and attend the ball proposed to be given in their honor on the 29th inst.

Nine Weeks.

Officer Campbell to-day conveyed to the provencial gaol a man named Andrew Lawson, a seaman of the British bark Wanlock, now loading naval stores at Esquimalt. Lawson had refused to obey the orders of the officer in charge, and was sentenced to nine weeks at hard labor by Justice Fisher.

Can't Get Rid of Her.

A few days an old blind Indian woman was arrested and charged with screaming on the streets, but his honor discharged her on account of her pitiable condition. Since that time the police have been unable to get rid of the woman. Her husband will have nothing to do with her as he says she is too fond of beer. She, however, is bound to retaliate, and has now charged him with assault, and the case will come up for hearing to-morrow.

Sons of England Picnic.

The excursion under the auspices of the Sons of England of New Westminster, to Mine's Bay, Active Pass, took place on Tuesday on the Princess Louise. There were 365 excursionists and 200 on the Cutch. The party engaged in athletic sports, for which a number of prizes were given. The shooting at glass balls did not display very good marksmanship as the winner of the silver card basket only broke two balls out of five shots. The New Westminster band was present and enlivened the proceedings. The party returned to New Westminster in the evening, all delighted with the day's enjoyment.

Where is he?

Prof. Whiting has gone! Where and why, nobody knows. He came, here from Port Townsend, where he belonged to the U. S. Army, a few weeks ago and took the position of leader of the Queen City Band which position he held until Saturday night, since which time he has not been seen. His friends are naturally anxious about him as it is hardly probable that he went across the Sound, because he never mentioned to anyone that he was going. Saturday evening he played at the concert given by McKenzie Munroe, and by his splendid playing on that and other occasions made many friends in the musical profession. He was evidently a steady man and with the exception of a small board bill left no debts behind that are known of.

Will Try and Settle.

In the city police court this morning Thos. Johnson was up on the charge of assaulting his wife. The prosecutrix in the case said that they had been married for 20 years, during which time she had not had a month's peace, she left him in London some years ago and came to Victoria with her family. Thinking that he might reform if taken away from his old haunts she sent him money to come and join her, which he did. The change in climate, however, did not affect him, and if anything he was worse than ever. She had had him up once before, but had to pay his fine as he promised to reform; but it was no good and she wanted to be separated.

His honor—Well, I can't make a good man of him.

Mrs. J.—No, nor nobody else can.

His honor (to Johnson)—You hear what your wife says. Is it true?

Johnson—Well, sir, I think she puts a little on.

With this he put on a repentant look, and his wife said she would pay his fare if he would leave the country. His honor, however, thought it would be better to let the couple settle it out of court and he adjourned the case until to-morrow.

What Whiskey Did.

Tattle cases were again the chief objects of attention in the city police court this morning, although a case of vagrancy was squeezed in to change the monotony of things. The culprit in the latter case was an individual named Johnson, who not many years ago owned one of the very best saloons and grounds in the Province, namely, the Gorge Hotel, but owing to the habit of using too much whiskey, he was found at last to give it up. The downfall was too much for him and as a consequence his mind became deranged and for a number of years he was confined in the provincial jail. After that he was confined in the convalescent home at the Royal Hospital, and later at the Jubilee Hospital. He left the latter place a few days ago and was wandering around the streets until arrested, and this morning he was given one month.

DANGEROUS DYNAMITE.

Dynamite Cartridges Put into a Blacksmith's Fire.

Last Monday morning when the blacksmith working at the corporation waterworks workshops on Pandora street lit his fire, a number of dynamite cartridges, that had been placed there during the night by some unknown person, exploded and gave the workman a scare that was hard to get over. Nothing more was thought of the matter until this morning when a number of dynamite cartridges and caps were found under a lot of pipes. They had been set afire but only burned slowly as a concussion is needed to make them explode, and consequently no damage was done, but if a pipe had happened to strike one of them, no doubt the whole building would have been scattered around the city. Dynamite cartridges are kept in the house, and the police are of opinion that the deed is the act of boys who do not know what a serious thing they are doing in the eyes of the law. It is to be hoped that boys will be kept away from the place, and very often without thinking they do things they might be very sorry for afterwards.

Held Up.

A few evenings ago as a boiler maker working at the Albion was going home over the Rock Bay bridge four men attempted to "hold him up," but he was too fleet for them, and managed to escape. Three of the would-be highwaymen ran for town, but one who was more ambitious than the others, followed the boilermaker across the bridge. Seeing that only one man was following him, the iron pounder, who by the way is about six feet high and weighs about 180, turned and catching his follower gave him a bearing that perhaps will teach him to pick out a lighter man in the future. It is not known who the men were, and as it was dark their would-be victim could not recognize any of them.

Golden Gate Park.

The last annual report of the commissioners of the Golden Gate Park of San Francisco has been issued. It shows that a great deal of work has been done during the year, amounting in round numbers to $126,000. The receipts, however, are in excess of this, being $130,000. During the year 25,700 feet of drives and walks were constructed, varying in width from 12 to 60 feet. Trees, shrubs and plants to the number of 167,364, were put in, and considerable other work done. A great deal of the income of the park is provided by donations from public spirited citizens, and the fame of the park has spread over the world. The natural advantages, however, are not equal to those afforded at Beacon Hill, and by the expenditure of a few thousands that park can be made just as attractive as the one at San Francisco. It is quite likely that the citizens of Victoria will some day fully appreciate the advantages of making the city attractive, and may see their way clear to find the necessary funds to do so. Although very pretty now, the grounds at Beacon Hill could be greatly improved upon.

From Wellington.

A gentleman who arrived from Wellington to-day, says everything is as quiet as ever and the people are still wondering what the militia were sent up for. The usual demonstration takes place every afternoon but the strikers are careful that they give the authorities no cause for offense. There are not as many men working in the mine as when the soldiers went up and it is expected that they will all leave before long.

Telephone Matters.

The increase of the telephones in this city and the outlying districts is rapid, and in consequence the lines have to be extended from time to time. Latterly considerable work has been done, among which is a new line of poles along John street; a new line out to Ross Bay; one on the Gorge road, and other minor short lines. New phones are being added from day to day. Mr. McMicking the manager, has latterly made one or two important improvements in the switch board at the central office, one, a change in transmitters, being of a nature to facilitate the answering of calls. The street car line is a source of worry to the operators, but time and perseverance will conquer the difficulty.
